

Angel:

Select chapters from the current draft of my novel will be available to read. Chapters 20-22 will be posted upon publication, with more to come.

My book plays upon the classic fantasy road trip in a world ruled by a pantheon of gods and their mortal Orders. Kayla, a Disciple of the Order of Odyessa, is present during an attack on Odyessa's capital city, Veliwyn, by the mad god of law Tyrus. She's tasked with reaching Tyrus' home, Spiretop, to preserve her home, but to reach it, she needs the help of a Faithless Ranger, Cassandra. Together, they navigate the wilds of Theodyn while Kayla realizes that the gods are not the benevolent deities she'd been raised to believe in, and the corruption at the world's heart might not be so simple as Odyessa made it out to be. It's a fun, sapphic, admittedly a little dark romp through Cass and Kayla's chaotic lives, exploring what makes someone worthy of faith.

This book has dramatically evolved since I first started working on it last November, and Cass might just be my favorite character I've ever written. I've developed a unique magic system, technology, and monsters to make it work, and I'm proud of how it's taken shape so far.

The chapters currently published take place aboard a train bound for Spiretop. What should have been a simple train ride from Veliwyn to Tyrus devolves into a brawl as Kayla's identity as a Disciple of Odyessa is brought into question.

Fimbulwinter:

A modern day retelling of Norse mythology published as a web serial. A Valkyrie sets Fimbulwinter, the three year calamity leading up to the prophesied end of all things, Ragnarok, in her quest for revenge. It's a story about breaking the molds we were made to fit and forging our own paths. The first two chapters, featuring a Valkyrie from Midgard and another from Jotunheim, are out now.

Chapter one is Kara's story, the aforementioned Midgardian Valkyrie. When she's forced to carry her brother's killer to Valhalla while he rots in Helheim, she decides to take matters into her own hands, and kill what's already dead.

The next chapter takes place a hundred years prior. Mist, the jotunn daughter of Utgard-Loki, has bled to earn her place among the Valkyries in a culture that loathes her people. On the night she's to be sworn in, Thor drunkenly challenges her to a fight that she has no choice but to accept.

The story has been mostly planned, stretching from the start of Fimbulwinter until Ragnarok. A couple of one-shots introduce new characters and take place before Fimbulwinter, like Mist's story.

Blog:

The blog section of the website is going to be for me to talk about the creative process behind my writing, or whatever else crosses my mind. To begin with, I'll be publishing a series called Mythology Retold, where I'll be talking about the myths relevant to Fimbulwinter. For the two chapters available upon publication, the death of Baldur, the god of light, and Thor and Loki's encounter with the giant Utgard-Loki are the most applicable.

Short Stories:

In addition to Angel and Fimbulwinter, I also plan to publish short stories on occasion. One that I wrote in '22 is already up, The World Sculptor, revised to flow smoother.

I have a hard time working on shortform content, mostly because I fall in love with my own characters and devise seven book sagas for them, but when I do manage to work around that little roadblock, this is where they'll end up.

The Rest of the Site:

A couple notes about the other things you can find on my site: I have a new Instagram account for my writing, and a Patreon that as of now just acts as a tip jar. In the future, I'd like to be able to put exclusive content and early access up on it. There's also a link to my Wattpad, where I'll also be publishing some of my content. Not all of it, of course, as not to eliminate the need for my own website, but I do prefer my own UI. Finally, you can sign up for a newsletter where I'll announce what's being published when.